Her latest book, Decolonizing Education: Nourishing the Learning Spirit (2013), is a multi-faceted inquiry into how all education may be decolonized. For the first time in her writing, Battiste shares in detail her own roots, making the text come alive with stories of her childhood, her university studies and other educational experiences, and her ongoing pedagogical passions.

Decolonizing Education: Nourishing the Learning Spirit ...

Education is stripped of all possible intrinsic good or social good—it is a necessary expenditure insofar as it can benefit the individual. This culture is simply not sustainable: to prioritize joy and true fulfillment in education, we must adopt an anti-capitalist approach to our academics and call on the University to make systemic changes ...
